

We've spent the past year fine-tuning a unique online diversity session with an emphasis on "inclusive practices" that can actually change bias and create connection. We'd like to offer you – and any diversity practitioners you know – free seats to experience it firsthand. Just email us or register on our website at www.rdrgroup.com

Description This course material is based on a study RDR is conducting with Yale University that research suggests may be the key to truly changing bias. So, in addition to exploring inclusive behaviors in a virtual context a follow-up process is provided to make sure they are implemented. Don't miss the opportunity to keep yourself, your team and your organization connecting inclusively – even if it is only virtual for now.

The online course consists of two 90-minute sessions with a 15-minute break and includes printable workbooks along with six weeks of follow-up templates.

COMMENTS FROM PAST PARTICIPANTS:

"This is a tough time, but RDR's training via Zoom was a wonderful experience. I had my doubts about an online workshop but loved this one. I would highly recommend it."

"The virtual presentation was handled perfectly (and I'm in IT). The material was hands-on, research based and the delivery was seamless."

"RDR have taken training content and married it with a virtual delivery at just the right time!"

Time The course is being offered on two different dates Tuesday, April 20th from 1-4:15pm (EST) and Thursday, April 29th from 8-11:45am (EST)
